They all used to come here, from Napoleon III to Frank Sinatra - Biarritz used to be the Monte Carlo of the Atlantic coast but with time, the glamour faded. Thanks to windsurfing and other water sports, however, the city has rejuvenated. It now is the perfect destination for a relaxing weekend break, and there is no need to rush: the city is fairly small and you can easily see everything even on a short visit. One thing worth to set aside time for is the morning market in Les Halles: try the city's own mamia, fresh sheep's milk curd.

THE CITY

Dutourdumonde Photography/Shutterstock.com

In medieval times and up to the 17th century, Biarritz was an unassuming fishing and whaling community. Spotters would perch on the Atalye plateau above the village and use smoke signals to tell the villagers when whales were nearby.

In the 18th century, Biarritz took its first steps toward becoming a tourist destination, when Comtesse de Montijo spent two lazy family holidays here. During the following century, the town's popularity grew, as kings and queens of nations and the silver screen started and kept up visiting. Bette Davis, Frank Sinatra and Rita Hayworth also came here to explore the Monte Carlo of the Atlantic.

Today, the city is primarily a tourist destination but it still manages to maintain its character and steer clear of tackiness. This is mainly because most visitors come from nearby Spain and the rest of France.

Biarritz is also a famous spot in the world of surfing. Grand Plage and Place du Port Vieux is where surf shops such as O'Neill and Quiksilver are located: Grand Plage is a classic beach and Miramar Beach the most fashionable among those of the entire Atlantic coast. Surfers congregate at several beaches, from Biarritz all the way up to Hossegor.

DO & SEE

LuminatePhotos by judith/Shutterstock.com

Biarritz is located in Basque territory, 18km from the Spanish border. The sunny location on the Bay of Biscay makes it perfect for surfing and this culture is deeply rooted in the city's ambience. Several prestigious surf tournaments have been hosted by Biarritz. Other popular sports practised here are Basque pelota, golf and rugby.

Hôtel du Palais

Eugénie, wife of Napoleon III, created Hôtel du Palais at the end of the 19th century and it still towers over the northern end of Grand Plage. A visit is well worth the time, in fact, it is essentially a must see - the interiors and the atmosphere are reminiscent of a bygone era. Renovation works will be happening until summer 2020, but the exterior of the building will still be perfectly observable.

Plateau de l'Atalaye

The views of the Atlantic waves crashing over the cliffs below are dramatic.

This is where the whale watchers would have been on the lookout, at a small building called cloche d'Alarme. A statue of the Virgin Mary, raised in 1865, perches on one of the cliffs that can be reached via a bridge.

Nearby is also the quaint Place Sainte-Eugénie and the old fishing port Port des Pêcheurs. Talk a casual walk around and do not forget to pass the park Esplanade de la vierge or the local aquarium close by.

Russian Orthodox Church

The Russian orthodox church of Alexander Nevsky may seem a bit out of place, but just before the Russian revolution in 1917, many aristocrats arrived here and bought that piece of land, where they built up the church.

Biarritz Aquarium

The Musée de la Mer, the aquarium of Biarritz, is a great place to take your family for an impressive marine display. The diverse sea life is portrayed in an elegant and entertaining manner. Eagle rays measuring 90cm in width share their tank with about 30 sharks, barracudas and many more, including seals.
