Crete, the largest Greek island, is washed by the waters of the eastern Mediterranean, and so enjoys a mild climate. An island where Myth meets History, where the age-old Cretan culture has its roots in the long-ago, where the sea meets the mountains and unspoiled nature coexists with modern tourist infrastructure. Crete has a thousand faces: one for each and every sort of traveller: the nature-lover, the explorer, the cosmopolitan, the lover of history and culture.

THE ISLAND

Roman Eremenko/Shutterstock.com

Crete, the largest island in Greece, is one of the most popular travel destinations of the Mediterranean. It's an island with a thousand faces that combines everything a traveller might ask for: a rich history, several major attractions, a unique food culture, a vibrant nightlife, magnificent nature and pristine beaches.

On Crete flourished the first prehistoric civilization of note on European soil, that of the Minoan Bronze-Age, and its majestic palaces can still be visited today. In the long history of the island, a multitude of different cultures and conquerors have passed through, leaving behind important traces on the island. As a result, present-day Crete has a high level of historical, archaeological and cultural points of interest.

The heart of Crete beats in its cities: Chania, the Venice of the East, Renaissance Rethymno, cosmopolitan Heraklion and picturesque Agios Nikolaos, Sitia and Ierapetra. In addition museums and historical sites and buildings, you'll find many shops selling local products, lively bars and cafés, as well as restaurants where you can try the both delicious and healthy Cretan cuisine.

At the same time, Crete stands out for its unique natural environment. On one hand, a seemingly endless and indented coastline offers countless beaches for each and every taste. At the other extreme, there is a spine of high mountains ideal for hiking and mountaineering. Gorges to wander through, caves to explore, valleys to admire, all waiting the visitor's glance. In Crete, you'll never fall short of things to do.

CITIES & TOWNS

Olga Gavrilova/Shutterstock.com

From the colorful Old Town of Chania to the Renaissance buildings of Rethymnon, and from the cosmopolitan city of Heraklion to the picturesque Agios Nikolaos and Sitia, each and every Cretan city has its own attractions and personality.

Heraklion

Heraklion is the largest city of Crete and the island's capital. Its long history began in post-Minoan times, even though the nearby Knossos used to be the most important Minoan centre, and saw the succeeding of various conquerors, whose traces are still evident in the city. For instance, one of Heraklion's most important landmarks is the Kouless Fortress in the Venetian harbour.

Nowadays, Heraklion is a large modern city, cosmopolitan and busy all year round. It is also an important economic centre and has a rich cultural life. In recent years, many streets around the centre have become pedestrianized and link the major monuments of the city, so that one can go about on foot more easily, free from the rush of traffic. In addition to its many interesting museums and tourist attractions, Heraklion has a unique charm worth savouring while on visit: saunter along the pedestrian streets of its historic centre, lose yourself in the alleyways of the Old Town, take your ease in the coffee bars and raki-joints that are a part of the city's culture.

Chania

Chania, or "Venice in the East", is the second biggest city in Crete, built on the site of old Kydonia. It has managed to keep its original appearance and its authentic colours in balance with the strong growth of recent years. It is one of the most picturesque cities in Greece, keeping alive the imprint of the various cultures that have passed through down the centuries.

In recent decades, Chania has emerged as one of the fastest growing tourist centres on Crete. Especially during the summer, the Venetian harbour and the narrow lanes of the Old Town are swamped by visitors from all round the globe. At the same time, cultural activities reach a peak with the hosting of sundry festivals and events in the renovated historical buildings, such as the impressive Moro shipyards. The former Venetian Monastery of Saint Francis now hosts the Archaeological Museum of Chania.

But it also remains a living city beyond the limits of the tourist season. The numerous student population and the active local groups continue the long intellectual and spiritual heritage of Chania, preserving it to this very day.

Rethymno

The third largest city on Crete, built on the site of the old Minoan Rithymna, Rethymno came to life during the Venetian era and still retains a Renaissance appearance. The most well-preserved structure is Rethymno's Fortress, located on a hill and dominating the city's skyline. Another major tourist attraction is the charming historic harbour, dotted with quaint cafés and taverns. In the Old Town, Venetian architectural elements coexist with Ottoman ones, creating a unique charm instead of a big contrast.

In the summer, Rethymno has visitors from all over the world, who base themselves here for the exploration of the Prefecture and of the whole island, whilst in the winter the students of the local University bring a buzz to the place. During spring, the Rethymno Carnival takes place, which is a century-old celebration that has become an institution famous throughout the country.

Agios Nikolaos

Agios Nikolaos is one of the most picturesque towns in East Crete and a gateway to the whole region. It enjoys a strategic location on the Gulf of Mirabello and in the summer it turns itself into a cosmopolitan resort. The city chiefly subsists on tourism, but despite the boom it has not lost its small town feel.

An attraction of Agios Nikolaos is the Vouliagmeni Lake, where, according to old myths, Aphrodite and Athena were wont to come and bathe. Beautiful Neo-Classical buildings were put up round and about the small harbour, which is lined up with restaurants, cafés and shops and is a favoured spot for a "volta" – an evening walk – for locals and visitors alike.

East of the lake is another favoured spot in Agios Nikolaos – the beach of Kitroplateia, a place for a quick "dip" right in the city centre. If you feel like exploring but without going too far, Agios Nikolaos is close enough to the cosmopolitan and up-market resort of Elounda, as well as to the famous island of Spinalonga.

Sitia

Sitia is the best 'ambassador' for East Crete: authentic, uncrowded and picturesque. It can be an ideal base for the exploration of the easternmost parts of the island, including the popular Vai Beach, home to Crete's biggest palm forest.

The city, originally founded by the Minoans, has a troubled history of conquest and destruction, but managed to survive and prosper. Nowadays, it is a tranquil seaside town with about 10,000 inhabitants, built like an amphitheatre on the hills around the its lovely harbour, featuring colourful boats, several eateries and a beautiful promenade. Sitia also features a historic fortress, an Archaeological and a Folklore museum, as well as a long sandy beach where during summer locals and tourists flock to enjoy some relax or water sports.

Interesting fact: Vitsentzos Kornaros, one of the most important Cretan writers and author of the epic poem Erotokritos, was born in Sitia.

Ierapetra

The southernmost city of Crete and the fourth largest one in the country, Ierapetra combines the infrastructure of a tourist resort with easy access to pristine beaches and beautiful countryside the surrounding areas. A popular tourist destination within easy reach from here is the unspoilt Chrysi Island with its golden beach.

Ierapetra is a city full of life throughout the year. Its icon is without a doubt the Kale fortress, and its liveliest part is the main promenade with its cafes, taverns and restaurants. Ierapetra is also the main commercial centre of the province for agricultural exports to Europe. Economic prosperity is due both to tourism and to the production of early vegetables grown in the many greenhouses in the area. An important product of the region is Cretan olive oil, which is used in many of the city's Mediterranean eateries.

Malia

Malia offers plenty to do, not only during the day but also at night. Indeed, its vibrant nightlife has nothing to envy to bigger European destinations like Ibiza. Bars and nightclubs spring up like mushrooms near restaurants, taverns, hotels and shops, making it a popular tourist destination in Northern Crete.

In addition, Malia also features a busy organized beach, a charming old town quarter and the third largest Minoan palace in Crete. You can get there by bus from Heraklion, departing from the station near the port.

Hersonissos

Hersonissos is the night-life paradise of Crete, boasting numerous bars, nightclubs, hotels and restaurants. There is also a series of nice beaches and very small bays for a relaxing day on the sand. The town is evidently the ideal place for sea, sun and fun lovers. It is only a half an hour drive from the centre of Heraklion and you can get there by bus, departing from the station near the port.

DO & SEE

Mila Atkovska/Shutterstock.com

Crete is filled with history and scenic landscapes. Archaeological sites, historical landmarks, fascinating museums, isolated monasteries, challenging walking trails and much more await to be explored. No matter what you choose to visit, your trip will certainly enrich and amaze you.

The Old Town of Chania

The Old Town of Chania is characterized by a blend of Venetian, Ottoman and Neoclassical monuments and architecture, attesting its long and rich history. Its streets are narrow, colorful and picturesque, which is why it's sometimes called "Venice of the East". During your stroll here you'll pass by flowered balconies, traditional knife shops, Cretan boot shops, lively restaurants and cozy cafes. Don't miss the beautiful promenade along the Venetian port, where you can see the Venetian lighthouse, one of the symbols of Chania. The town used to be surrounded by walls, but only parts of them are still standing nowadays.

Koules Fortress

The Venetian Koules Fortress, also known as Castello a Mare (which means "fort on the sea"), is one of Heraklion's main landmarks and is located on the old harbour. This big, square-shaped structure was built in the 16th century to protect the city and was subsequently armed with cannons. It was restored in recent times and now hosts an exhibition about its fascinating history. The rooftop offers scenic views over the sea and Heraklion city.

Historical Museum of Crete

Founded in 1953, the Historical Museum of Crete in Heraklion hosts a permanent collection showcasing the history of Crete from the third century AD to the end of the Second World War. Artefacts, paintings, sculptures, manuscripts and other objects of interest are displayed in chronological order, with visual materials, multimedia and audio guides available during your visit to help you learn more about Crete's fascinating past. A section of the museum is dedicated to the famous writer Nikos Kazantzakis. Another highlight of the exhibition are two paintings by the Greek artist El Greco: The Baptism of Christ and View of Mt. Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine. The museum also hosts temporary exhibitions.

The Minoan Palace of Knossos

The ruins of the Palace of Knossos, the largest and most brilliant centre of the Minoan civilization, are located 5 kilometres south of the historical centre of Heraklion. Twisting corridors and stairwells, which used to connect as many as five storeys, create a truly labyrinthine complex, which is why the palace has often been seen by scholars as the equivalent of the mythological Minoan "Labyrinth".

The palace features important architectural innovations for the times it was built in, such as water supply systems and sewer networks, shafts for the lighting and ventilation of the lower levels of the palace complex, as well as rooms equipped with baths and sanitary facilities that almost match modern constructions in ingenuity and function.

The Natural History Museum of Crete

The Natural History Museum of Crete does not only present the natural wealth of the island, but also of the rest of Greece and of the Eastern Mediterranean. Here you'll find, among other things, a discovery centre for children, an earthquake simulator, aquariums and terrariums, a large collection of fossils and a replica of the largest mammal ever, which lived on Crete 9 million years ago. You'll also be able to learn about the geological evolution of Crete, about plants and organisms that thrive on the island or about extinct and endangered species. The animals are displayed by way of accurate representations in their real dimensions (dioramas). The museum features an outdoor botanical garden as well.

Samaria Gorge

The gorge of Samaria is the longest and one of the most imposing gorges in Europe. Perhaps the most popular trekking path of Greece runs along its course, passing by varied landscapes, water springs, different types of trees, cliffs, pools and impressive rocks. The gorge is 18 kilometres long and its width varies between 150 and 3-4 metres at its narrowest point, which is known as "Sideroportes". The walk down the gorge begins at "Xiloskalo", in Omalós (at an altitude of 1.200 metres). It requires 4 to 8 hours depending on the walking pace.

Venetian walls of Heraklion

The fortification works of Heraklion are rightfully counted among the most important in the Eastern Mediterranean, regarding their size, aesthetics and their functional superiority. Heraklion had been already fortified in the years of the First Byzantine period (330-840 AD). These fortifications were supplemented by the Arabs (840-961), the Byzantines (961-1204), and the Venetians (after 1211).

It was the looming Turkish threat that compelled the Venetians to reinforce the defense of the capital city of the "Regno di Candia" (Kingdom of Crete), using the latest technologies of the time. The fortifications that can be seen today were based on designs made by the Venetian architect Michele Sanmicheli, and they were built somewhere between 1462 and 1560. The main wall was three kilometres long and had four gates and seven bastions. It was surrounded by a large moat which once had additional bastions on the outside.

Lasithi Plateau

At an altitude of 850 metres, the Lasithi Plateau is the largest mountain plain in Crete and the only one inhabited all the year round. Nowadays, it has been transformed into a giant garden. Until some time ago, irrigation was managed by thousands of small windmills. There are numerous settlements at the plain where you can try local delicacies and the traditional raki drink. Lasithi plateau and its surroundings are also ideal for trekking walks or even cycling and mountain biking. A major attraction is the Dikteon cave above Psychro village, where - according to legend - the god Zeus was born and raised.

Toplou Monastery

historic sights. It is a true bastion and a living museum of the island's monastic history.

To make the most of the limited space inside the fort's walls and the safety they afforded, cells were built across three storeys. There is a small but solemn and stirring two-aisled church dedicated to the Virgin Mary and to Saint John the Theologian, decorated with murals that still survive and featuring a chancel screen with noteworthy 18th century icons.

The Ecclesiastic Art Museum houses some of Crete's most significant icons, including Megas ei Kyrie' (Great Art Thou, Lord), a 1770 icon by Ioannis Kornaros. The icon is made up of four main sections, further separated into 57 smaller areas, and includes hundreds of faces which come together magnificently to depict the Great Blessing of Waters.

The organic vineyards on the monastery's grounds produce organic wine of excellent quality and it is also possible to visit the winery.

Minoan Palace of Phaistos

The palace complex and the city of Phaistos were built on a hill, offering a panoramic view to the east, the north and the south, which is alone worth the visit. At the east, the fertile plain of Messara opens up with the Lasithi mountains in the background, while towards the south the Asterousia mountains come into view and to the north the majestic Psiloritis dominates the scenery together with the verdant hills at its foot.

Phaistos was the second largest Minoan city and an important administrative centre of south-central Crete. The Minoan city covered a large area around the palace complex.

Mythology links Phaistos to Rhadamanthus, a brother of Minos, whose dynasty is believed to have ruled in the city. According to another story, it was founded by Phaistos, a son of Hercules. Homer mentioned that the city took part in the Trojan War, led by Idomeneus, king of Knossos and the whole of Crete.

Arkadi Monastery

Arkadi Monastery is perhaps the most known monastery of Crete due to the Holocaust of 1866. Its location and impressive architecture are also worth noting. This large fortified complex built at the end of the Venetian rule. Apart from the monks' cells, the central building also includes warehouses, stables and premises for processing agricultural products.

The two-aisled church, dedicated to Saint Constantine and Saint Helen and to the Transfiguration of the Saviour, is one of the most important architectural monuments of the Cretan Renaissance. It was completed in 1587 and its facade clearly demonstrates the penetration of western architectural trends in 16th and 17th-century Crete.

Lake Kournas

Between the cities of Chania and Rethymnon, at the north edge of the White Mountains, you can find Lake Kournas, the only freshwater lake in Crete. Whether you are going to swim in the lake, walk on its shores, sail in a boat, or have a picnic, this is a good destination for a day trip. It lies in a valley and the landscape changes with season: in winter the water level rises and the lake grows, while in summer it falls, revealing sandy beaches and the spring that feeds it - the Amati.

The usual dark colours at the centre of the lake are the result of algae growth. The ecosystem of the lake and the River Delphina are amongst the most vital of the island and of Greece in general. The area is also a stopping place for migratory birds, and a spot where one meets many species endemic to the island or the east Mediterranean.

Trekking in Crete

In addition to the famous Samaria gorge, there are several other beautiful gorges where you can go trekking in Crete. The gorge of Agios Nikolaos is 4 km long and is flanked by the peaks of Ambelakia and Samari. It is considered to be the most important gorge of Psiloritis and Central Crete, and was named after the Byzantine chapel of Agios Nikolaos which is located at its southern entrance.

Zakros gorge in Eastern Crete is also called the “valley of the dead” because of the Minoan cave burials that were found there. The trekking route is 2,5 km long and begins south-east of the village of Zakros, passing through the gorge and ending next to the Minoan palace at Kato Zakros.

The gorge of Aradena is an impressive 7-kilometre long gorge. Its entrance is located at the deserted village of Aradena, at the western end of the plateau of Anopoli of Sfakia, below the imposing, high peaks of the White Mountains (Lefka Ori). Near the entrance to the gorge there is an iron Bailey bridge, which connects Anopoli with Aradena and the small settlement of Agios Ioannis to the west. It is the tallest bridge in Greece and the second tallest in Europe, therefore ideal for bungee jumping.

Rikhtis gorge is a beautiful small gorge of about 3 kilometres, located in Eastern Crete and featuring a marked route. It follows a stream that flows all year round and creates a splendid waterfall. The gorge begins a little outside the village of Exo Mouliana and ends at the beach of Rikhtis, east of Kalavros village (15 km west of Siteia).

BEACHES

MillaF/Shutterstock.com

Crete has over 1000 kilometers of coastline to offer, along which there are beaches with endless stretches of sand, beaches made up only of pebbles, organized beaches, deserted and pristine beaches, beaches for camping, diving, water sports and more. Try going to more than one before choosing your favourite, which could still prove a challenge.

Balos Lagoon

On the northwest coast of Cape Gramvousa, in a bay formed between the lesser capes of Tigani and Vouha, lies the sea-lagoon of Balos. A quiet beach, opposite the two Gramvousa islands (Wild and Tame), it features warm, turquoise waters and white sand. The sand is actually partly composed of minutely crushed sea-shells, which impart a pinkish hue to it. The water immediately off shore is shallow, but deepens elsewhere.

Matala

Located on the southern coast of Crete and part of the Heraklion prefecture, the village of Matala has an organized sandy beach with crystal clear deep water and cliffs featuring caves carved in the rock, which you can visit. These caves were once used as residences, most famously by the hippies in the 1960s and 70s. Every year in June, the three-day Matala Beach Festival takes place, attracting many visitors to the village.

Falassarna Beach

Falassarna Beach is a series of large sandy stretches that together run on for 3 km. The main beach of Pacheia Ammos (Deep Sands), one of the most popular in Crete, is made up of white sand and turquoise waters. It has sun-beds and umbrellas, facilities for water-sports and courts for beach-volleyball.

If you wish to avoid the crowds at Pacheia Ammos, you can seek out one of the other strands which are to be found nearby, both to the north and south. They are smaller, rather isolated and without facilities; some have pebbles, others sand: but all are ideal for chilling out.

Because of the strong winds that blow here,

Falassarna is an ideal destination for wind surfing lovers.

Elafonissi & Kedrodasos

Elafonissi beach is one of the most emblematic of the island, and is featured on countless postcards. It can be found 80 km from Chania. Elafonissi is a small island, connected to the Cretan mainland by a shallow crossing of several hundred meters. The whole area, which is part of the NATURA 2000 programme, is characterized by pale sands, shallow and crystal-clear waters turquoise in colour, and small pink patches made up from crushed sea-shells.

South of Elafonissi is another area of wild and remarkable beauty: Kedrodasos, also part of the NATURA 2000. Access can be by car (up to a certain point) or on foot following the E4 walking-route from the beach of Elafonissi itself. Dunes of white sand and ancient cedars cover the vicinity. The main beach is sandy and also boasts crystal-clear turquoise waters. Along the coastal path from Elafonissi to Kedrodasos there are small deserted coves. Unlike Elafonisi, Kedrodasos is absolutely unspoilt and because of its isolation nudists like to come here.

Gialiskari Beach

Following the road east out of Paleochora, you will find a nice and secluded beach, Gialiskari. Actually Gialiskari is a twin beach, one each side of a small spit of land projecting into the sea, but both equally charming and idyllic. The west side is made of small pebbles, the east has pale sand. The water is clear and deep. The area is slightly developed, with a café-canteen and a few umbrellas and sun-beds. To the east grow plentiful tamarisks, which shed a natural shadow and give relief from the hot suns of South Crete.

Here nudism is tolerated, especially on the eastern side.

Preveli Beach, with its iconic riverside palm-groves, is one of the most famous and beloved beaches in Crete. The forest of palms, covering some 10 acres, is the second largest of its sort in Crete and consists of an endemic species: the Theophrastus palm. A walk on the banks of the river or a pedalo ride through the palms and oleanders and into the gorge can be unforgettable experiences. Preveli beach is located at the mouth of the gorge, where the river Kourtaliotis ends in a delta. It has pale sands and a stony bottom to the crystalline water.

Triopetra & Agios Pavlos

Triopetra beach is sandy, pretty much unspoilt, featuring crystal-clear water and breathtaking sunsets. Its name means "Three Rocks" and refers to the impressive rocks that characterise its landscape.

Next to Triopetra, you'll find the charming Agios Pavlos beach. The vast dunes that enclose the beach are its chief attraction and they can attain up to 30 feet in height. The beach itself is sandy, with very clear water and a sea-bed that begs to be explored. In the middle of the beach there are some sea-worn caves.

Kommos Beach

Kommos is a single huge beach divided for convenience into two: the north part, called Potamos, is one of the largest venues for nudism. It is secluded and without organization; no hotels and catering facilities exist in the area as it has been classified as a protected archaeological zone. On every side there are tamarisks, carobs and sand-dunes.

The southern part, is by contrast very well-organized with umbrellas, sunbeds, showers and a lifeguard. Both sections have sand, clear water and large smooth rocks in the sea. As other beaches, they are exposed to the west winds, which can create large waves

Belegrina (Chrysi Island)

Belegrina Beach on the uninhabited Chrysi Island is known as the "golden beach" due to the colour of its sand, which can also have white and pink shades. It is a pristine beach with crystalline turquoise waters, ideal for snorkeling. On Chrysi Island, there survives a large cedar forest of some 85 acres, with large and impressive specimens.

Voulisma

At a distance of 12 km south of Agios Nikolaos is the settlement of Istron. You will reach it as you pass along the main national road east from Agios Nikolaos towards Ierapetra or Siteia. Located here is Voulisma, a large beach with fine white sand and shallow, blue waters. It is developed, with umbrellas, sunbeds, showers, water-sports and a lifeguard. It is a good location for young children, as the water deepens only gradually. By one end there is a canteen for food and drinks.

Agia Pelagia

Agia Pelagia is one of the most popular summer destinations in the Heraklion prefecture. It is 21 km from Heraklion and has a long beach of some 450m with fine sand. The water is crystalline, blue and almost always calm as the sea here is shut in within the bay that opens to the east, and so is protected from the northerly winds.

The beach is fully organized with sunbeds, umbrellas, showers, a lifeguard, water-sports .. and more. A diving school operates here too. The village doesn't lack tavernas, restaurants, cafeterias, bars, hotels of all grades, rentable rooms and apartments.

Potamos Beach

Potamos Beach is located in Malia, 37 km east of Heraklion. The city is a popular destination with a vibrant nightlife and several beaches, of which Potamos is one of the least crowded. It is named after a small river that flows there, forming a wetland of great importance. It is some 700 m long, with sand, blue crystalline waters and a few tamarisks around. If you go at the start of autumn, you will chance upon the white sea-lilies that grow in the sand: the heralds of autumn. Potamos is well organized: you will find sunbeds, umbrellas, toilets, showers and plenty of water-sports opportunities.

WINERIES

IRINA CHETVERIKOVA/Shutterstock.com

Many Cretan wine-making establishments are open to the public. You'll be able to tour the vineyards and cellars, learn more about the production process and the local wine tradition, as well as taste wines accompanied by typical Cretan appetizers.

Lyrarakis Winery

Lyrarakis Winery is a family business that has been making wine since 1966. It is located in the Peza wine-making zone, one of the most important of Crete. Their vineyard of 35 acres lies at an altitude of around 550 m.

The winery specializes in rare local varieties of wine, like the ancient Dafni and Plyto. Other varieties they produce are Vilana, Moshato White and French Sauvignon blanc. As for red varieties, the local Kotsifali, Madilari and Moshato are combined with international varieties such as Syrah, Merlot, and Cabernet Sauvignon. To learn more, you can have a guided tour of the vineyards, cellar and vine museum, and then take part in a wine tasting.

Boutari

Boutari is a family business that has been making wine for five generations, starting from 1879. The company runs seven wineries, one of which is located in Crete, more precisely in the Skalani area, 8 km from Heraklion and 4 km from Knossos. On the vineyard, located at an altitude of 200 m, they cultivate both red (Kotsifali, Mandilari, Syrah) and white varieties (Chardonnay, Malvasia Aromatica, Vilana and Muscat Spina). They organise informative tours and wine tastings all year round.

Dourakis Winery

Nominated "Greek winery of the year" by Luxury Travel Guide in 2018, Dourakis Winery is located in the fertile region of the east foothills of the White Mountains. Its vineyards are in the area of Alikambos, at an altitude of more than 330 m. Together with other regional wine-makers, they produce organic wines. Here you can taste red, white, rosé, and sweet wines from international varieties like Cabernet Sauvignon and Grenage Rouge, as well as local varieties such as Malvasia, Kotsifali and Romeiko. Note that tours and tastings need to be pre-booked.

Douloufakis Winery

Since the 1930s, the Douloufakis family has been producing both local and international varieties of wine. Located in the Dafnes wine region, the vineyards cover 20 hectares and are situated at an altitude of 350 m. Farmers from the nearby area supply additional quality grapes to the winery. The most characteristic grapes produced are the Cretan Liatiko and Vidiano. Other varieties they produce here are Malvasia, Chardonnay, Sauvignon Blanc, Kotsifali and Syrah.

To learn more about the varieties and the wine-making process, guided tours and wine tastings are available for booking. Scheduled tours of the vineyards also take place every day at 10am, 12pm and 2pm.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Leszek Glasner/Shutterstock.com

Best Time to Visit

Crete boasts one of the best climates in Europe, with an average of 300 days of sunshine a year. Generally speaking, there is a temperate Mediterranean climate, although during winter there is usually snow in the mountains. Winters in other parts of Crete are relatively mild, while spring, autumn and summer are sunny and warm, or even hot. The rainfall is concentrated from autumn until spring and is more frequent in the western part of the island.

Summer is, of course, peak season in Crete. The best time to visit is probably during shoulder season, namely in April, May, September and October, when the temperatures and the weather are good for beach days and sightseeing, but the touristic spots are not too crowded.

How to get to Crete

You can get to Crete either by air or by boat. Crete has two international airports (Chania International Airport and Heraklion International Airport) as well as a national one at Sitia with connections to other transport hubs in Greece. Chania International Airport is 12 km from the city of Chania and 68 km from the town of Rethymnon. The airport of Heraklion is but 5 km from the city of Heraklion and 65 km from Agios Nikolaos. For transportation from and to the airports you can check out the website of the local public transport (www.e-ktel.com/en). Car rental and taxis are also available at the airports.

Similarly, the two major ports of the island are also in Chania and Heraklion, but there are also four smaller ones: Kissamos, Rethymnon, Agios Nikolaos and Siteia. For ferry tickets and timetables you can visit the following website:

www.ferries.gr.

Public Transport

In Crete, there are two main bus companies: for the centre and east of the island, you need KTEL Heraklion-Lassithi, while for the west KTEL

Chania-Rethymnon. The two companies work in tandem, so one can purchase a ticket that crosses their nominal border. Tickets can be purchased at the main bus terminals, at some kiosks and on board. The website of the companies provides all timetables and the possibility to book tickets.

Passport / Visa

Greece can be visited visa-free for up to 90 days by citizens of most European countries, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, South Korea,

Taiwan, Malaysia, Israel, UAE and most countries in America. If you are unsure whether or not you need to apply for a visa, we recommend contacting the embassy or consulate in your country. International (non-Schengen) travelers need a passport that is valid for at least 3 months after the end of their intended trip in order to enter the Schengen zone. Citizens of Schengen countries can travel without a passport, but must have a valid ID with them during their stay.
