Montpellier has become one of Europe's newest holiday destinations. This is due to the combination of its proximity to the Mediterranean, its beautiful medieval city core and a vibrant nightlife (a quarter of its citizens are students). It is also a good destination for adventure seekers – the mountains of Cévennes are only an hour's drive away.

THE CITY

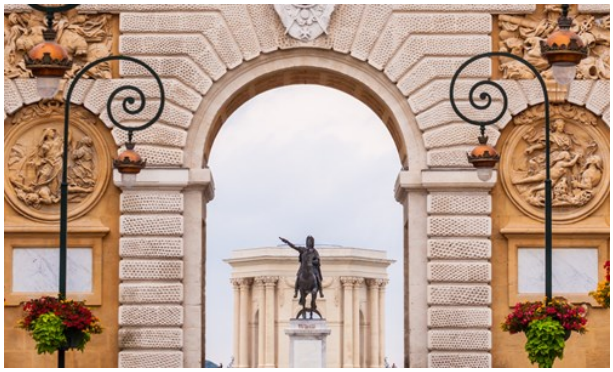
Olgysha/Shutterstock.com

Montpellier – originally called Monte Pestalario – is one of only a few larger cities in southern France that does not have Roman roots. The city was not founded until the 10th century, and came to be one of the most important cities for its Aragonese (Spanish) rulers. At the same time, the city's reputation as a seat of learning was growing, as it welcomed Jewish and Arab intellectuals.

In 1289, Montpellier's school of medicine and law gained university status. Its roster of famous alumni includes the creator of prophecies, Nostradamus, and the author Rabelais. The open-minded and liberal Montpellier was faced with several challenges over the next centuries. It was struck by the plague in the 1300s, and later became a stronghold for the French Protestants, the Huguenots. Until the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, they fought a losing battle against the Catholic Church and the French crown. By the time these religious wars ended, all surviving Huguenots had either surrendered or fled to England, Ireland or America.

Today, Montpellier is known for its university and a quarter of its citizens are students. The beautiful medieval area, "centre historique," is a pedestrian haven with marbled alleys like L'Ancien Courrier. Low-set medieval buildings and churches adorn the area's 16 squares, including the one in the city centre, Place de la Comédie.

DO & SEE



Matej Kastelic/Shutterstock.com

There is plenty to do in the way of culture and entertainment, as well as exciting tours to go on - from regional vineyards and wineries to hiking up Pic St-Loup. Visit the city's many cathedrals (Carre Sainte-Anne is one that stands out with its refurbished interior turned into an art space), walk down the windy streets of the old town, and plan a field trip to the nearby seaside villages.

Montpellier Cathedral

This Roman Catholic cathedral is a national monument of France and was originally a church founded in 1364 (it became a cathedral in 1536). This stunning building has beautiful stained glass, wonderful old religious paintings and an attached garden. This is an attraction well worth a visit.

DINING

Maksim Toome/Shutterstock.com

The cuisine of the Languedoc region has much in common with Mediterranean cooking, including sumptuous fresh ingredients from the best that both land and sea have to offer. In Montpellier, the ties to Catalonia on the other side of the Spanish border are apparent in the size of the portions served. The city has the full range of dining options from luxury restaurants to rustic neighbourhood eateries.

Playfood

Playfood takes on an innovative approach food preparation and presentation - all dishes are served in small glasses, allowing diners to sample a whole variety of flavors in one sitting. Desserts are served in small glasses as well - a full meal would typically include 9 glasses in total.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Jacob Lund/Shutterstock.com

Montpellier's large student population sets the tone to its vibrant nightlife. There are quite a few dance clubs, as well as concept bars that are not afraid to break away from convention and put unexpected twists on old familiar favorites. The warm evenings and relaxed atmosphere make Montpellier one of France's nicest cities for an evening out; many of the bars and clubs are located around Place Jean Jaurés in the Old Town. When in town, remember to savour the locally produced Languedoc wines and champagne.

By Coss Bar

This innovative cocktail bar is not afraid to think outside the box and leave convention behind - most of their cocktails are served in ways least expected by patrons, which never fail to pleasantly surprise. If in doubt, tell the bartender about your preferences and get a customized drink.

SHOPPING

kykykis/Shutterstock.com

Rue de la Loge is Montpellier's ultimate High Street, and the post-modern Polygone galleria just east of Place de la Comédie is three-storey open-air mall full of everything from designer fashions to deli foods. Halles Laissac (currently under reconstruction) and Halles Castellane are two good covered food markets next to each other on rue Anatole France by Place Jean Jaurés. Obligatory purchases include cheese, olives, and regional wines.

Rue de la Loge

Rue de la Loge is the main shopping strip in Montpellier. The street starts at Place de la Comédie, and is a good starting point for city walks. There are many individual stores and boutiques lining the street on either side - from international High Street names to local independent shops.

Address: Rue de la Loge, Montpellier

Old Town

There are many interior design, fashion and souvenir shops in the Old Town. Visit Zapa (on 18, Rue Foch) for their women’s fashions designed in-house, and go for the handmade notebooks at Trait (on 24, Rue de l’Aiguillerie). There are plenty of independent local and international chain stores to choose from.
